In first grade, there was a Scholastic book sale at my school. I bought book six, Moon Rising, and read it in just a few days. I was immediately hooked - from the writing style, to the character designs, I was in love.

I couldn't ever find more of the series at the time, but in 2nd grade I found the first book in the library, and read that in about a week. I bought the second and third books and that's my current status on the series! (I'm a slow reader, yeah. Been in this fandom for probably 5 years now and still haven't finished the main series.)

WoF is very well written, and it inspires me to become a better writer myself whenever I pick up one of the books!

~~(also, the pages smell nice.)~~

Well, one day I was at school in third grade me and my friend were talking about this series that her older sister was reading. She thought that I should try it. So I asked my mom if we could go to the library and check it out. So we did, and I checked out the second one, to. That night I stayed up late to read the book. The first one was okay, but once I finished that one, I was exited to read through Tsunami's train of thought. After reading that one, I was like, "wow! I love this series! It is my new favorite series!" So it was the second one that made me a Fanwing.

Yes, I double checked when I was at the library today, and if my memory serves me right, it was Chapter 5 of Book 1. It took me a few days to actually get into the book due to me having my own story featuring dragons that I am working on (I didn't want one to influence how I viewed the other). But then I got to chapter 5 and (SPOILER) Starflight is pulled into that secret meeting with Morrowseer, coming out completely distraught, so that he is accidentally tearing his favorite scroll without knowing it. Even though the book is in Clay's perspective, you feel so much emotion for Starflight, and you can't help but wonder what he was told, and what NightWing secrets he now has access to, and the torture of having to wait until Book 4 to find out. Maybe I over-assumed when reading it, now that I've finished book 4, but even looking back, I can't help but relive the emotions I felt reading it the first time, and besides, book 4 left me suffering through some other books in my book pile before I get to book 5 in Wings of Fire anyway (TombQuest 1, Ranger's Apprentice 10, and possibly Wrinkle in Time's Many Waters), so my interest clearly hasn't died. Besides, maybe Starflight did hear a thing or two from Morrowseer that we never found out, being left out because they weren't relevant to the story. I mean, we never get the full conversation do we? Just bits and peices. Then again, Starflight claims not to know any NightWing secrets, so... I don't know. (EVEN MORE SPOILER) But if Starflight really is blind, I'm going to be sad. Oh how he loved to read.

I have to say that I was a fan when I read the very first book, although I liked the earlier books better, when it focused mainly on the Dragonets of Destiny.

Which book made you a FanWing?

dolphindragon9345

I love the earlier books, where the main focus is on the Dragonets. I just like to pretend that somehow, the Prophecy was actually real.
